

Highlights

1. Development of a generalized way of compressing feature-space information of a deep learning classifier.
2. Determination of the independent vectors that are able to represent the classes of diabetic retinopathy from the information extracted from a deep learning model.
3. Visualization of each one of the independent components in the original image.